I'd like to transfer my 3 Bitcoin addresses from my computer to a new laptop but don't have access to my private key. Is this possible? I'd like to do this without asking a friend to to send Bitcoin to my new account first. A: You can do it directly. If you have X address then you can send all to Y. You can backup your wallet using a Desktop program like Electrum, HD-wallet for Android. A CLI would be Bitcoin Core, which can connect to your wallet through JSON RPC if you know the address. Then have X address. Get the corresponding public address. Download the transactions from it. Import the transactions to your new wallet, then send all the balance to X. The last part is tricky with Bitcoin Core. You need a working wallet of Y to get the corresponding private key. [Effects of cadmium on the development of foetuses in the rat: preliminary experimental study]. A preliminary experimental study has been carried out in order to determine cadmium (Cd) levels in maternal and foetal blood, placenta and foetal organs and to examine the developmental toxicity of this metal in the foetus of the rat. For that purpose, groups of 13 female rats of Wistar strain (8 weeks old) weighing between 200 and 350 g have been studied by means of two different Cd concentrations: 0.35 mg Cd kg-1 (control group) and 0.025 mg Cd kg-1. To be able to identify Cd levels in the maternal and foetal blood, placenta and foetal organs, and to estimate the "intra-organ" Cd distribution, including the relationship among these three, samples were collected 24 h after birth. Cd levels in maternal blood were very low, except in a mother exposed to Cd at the highest dose. However, Cd levels in maternal and foetal blood were greater than 50 ng
