The file server can be safely shut down during the switchover (redundancy mode) or swapped without hardware or software interruptions (hot swap). Contents When replicating a file server with a new server, the file system of the secondary server may not be active or in a non-operational state, which can cause significant problems. With file server switching, the file system of the server being replaced is closed and unmounted so that a clean system can be mounted in its place without taking down the service. Files and directories are copied in a synchronic fashion such that all processes are running in parallel and no files or data are in an unstable or inconsistent state. When the system is re-activated, all files and directories are restored to their original state. With hot swap, as the name implies, the file system is closed and unmounted, but the server can be swapped in and out without having to reboot the server or shut it down. This is useful when a server is hot-swapped on the fly, or when the system service needs to be downing windows to use browser in recovery mode I have a Toshiba laptop with two options in Windows 7 (other than default fresh install). Enable safeboot and enter in BIOS Disable safeboot and enter in BIOS The default option is I believe to have enabled safeboot. For option 2, I go into the BIOS under computer/hardware/boot settings and it lets me select option 2 as the default boot option. However, when I select "option 2" it will just not start. It will just stay on the windows logon screen for multiple minutes. It is not allowing me to logon. I tried to select option 3 and it drops into the windows recovery mode which allows me to run software to retrieve files but other than this there is not much else I can do. So my question is, can I disable safeboot so I can safely use the Windows 7 recovery mode and then boot into the default fresh install and/or can I somehow downgrade the Windows 7 from "Enable safeboot" to "Default" which would allow me to safely use the Windows 7 recovery mode and reboot into the default fresh install? A: Windows recovery is for system recovery. It won't help you fix a corrupted boot sector and force windows into booting into safe mode. Try to load the repair console instead. Maumelle names new administrator for
