This invention relates to methods of producing single crystals of magnesium silicide, particularly magnesium silicide whisker arrays, and single crystal whisker aggregates. Whiskers are crystalline structures which exist in a wide variety of metals and alloys and which have significant commercial importance. Metal whiskers are most easily fabricated on metals that have a low melting point. Certain metallic whiskers are known to possess useful mechanical and optical properties. In addition, metallic whiskers have proved useful as conductors and as electrodes in electrical devices. Magnesium (Mg), though often cited among metal whisker-producing metals, has heretofore not been deemed a valuable whisker-producing metal. (Noteworthy is U.S. Pat. No. 4,062,665 to Sekhar et al.) This patent reports that when bulk magnesium is heated to about 360.degree. C. under a partial vacuum of less than one torr, small amounts of magnesium will grow along the surface of the magnesium. Sekhar et al. recite a series of experiments designed to examine the reasons why magnesium will not produce whiskers. The Sekhar et al. experiments included dropping titanium rods into molten magnesium. These experiments were reported to yield no whisker growth. Similar behavior was reported for iron (Fe), tin (Sn), lead (Pb), aluminum (Al), and zinc (Zn). Sekhar et al. conclude that whisker growth does not occur until the magnesium is at a temperature of approximately 360.degree. C. and at reduced pressure. Further work was done by Sekhar et al. It was
