0:18 Satellite Telephone Operator Callsign & Alphabets Satellite Telephone Operator Callsign & Alphabets Satellite Telephone Operator Callsign & Alphabets An operator can call another operator or speak to another operator using his or her callsign, the callsign of the other operator, or the callsign to a coded group of operators, or another coded group. It is usually a requirement that two operators use the same callsign in order to call each other. Sometimes an operator may know the callsign of another operator, and have a specific need to contact that operator. In such a case, the operator may ask to be put into a loop of the specified operator, which is typically to prevent the calling operator from being connected to an operator he or she would not normally contact. Sometimes an operator may wish to call a number using the callsign of a coded group of operators instead of specifying the actual number to be called, either because the operator is unsure of the number, and the system will do the lookup to tell the operator which operator to call, or because some operators prefer not to give out their actual number, and require operators to call them using their callsign, thus both parties are protected from a "phishing" scam. For example, an operator calls his (or her) supervisor to make a complaint. As a matter of policy, the supervisor typically has a different callsign from the operators. 48:35 Satellite Internet Speed Test Up/Down Satellite Internet Speed Test Up/Down Satellite Internet Speed Test Up/Down HDTV Data Channel) may be available.
