Description of the Prior Art Since a polyarylene sulfide (hereinafter abbreviated as "PAS") is excellent in various properties as compared with other thermoplastic resins, it has been widely used in various industrial fields. However, the resin is still inferior in impact resistance in comparison with engineering plastics such as ABS, PC, etc., and thermal degradation resistance in comparison with cellulose, glass fiber or the like. It is known to incorporate or utilize a glass fiber in a resin composition to enhance the impact resistance or to improve the rigidity of the composite material. Japanese Patent Publication No. 45-9997 proposes a PAS resin composition in which glass fibers are incorporated. In the case of incorporating glass fibers into PAS, the addition amount thereof is about 15 to 40% by weight, and the glass fibers are oriented in the resin to enhance the mechanical strength. The addition of the glass fibers, however, results in a resin composition excellent in dimensional stability and mechanical strength, but not necessarily in impact resistance.
