Small-scale quantum magnetism in the organic spin ladder compound bis(tetramethylpiperidinophosphonic acid)dichloromanganese(II). The magnetic properties of the spin-ladder compound bis(tetramethylpiperidinophosphonic acid)dichloromanganese(II) (1) were investigated by dc and ac magnetic susceptibilities in the temperature range 4-300 K. At 4 K, 1 shows long-range antiferromagnetic ordering with an energy gap of 19 K. The ac-susceptibility shows a broad single resonance peak at 18 K. The central of this peak shifts to higher frequency as the temperature increases. In addition to the antiferromagnetic spin wave branch (AF branch), 1 displays a high-frequency spin wave branch (HFW branch), which shows a resonance frequency of about 2000 cm^{-1} . At room temperature, 1 exhibits a frequency gap of around 200 cm^{-1} .. According to the results of the univariate regression analyses, age, gender and

BMI were associated with STT measures. These results are consistent with the literature. JOA is a patient-based instrument which measures the physical function of the patient. It is

Dietary transection of the mesentery in the neonatal pig. Abdominal surgery during infancy is associated with an increased incidence of later bowel obstruction or intestinal atresia. Various neonatal models have been developed to study abdominal wall closure and intestinal obstruction in the neonate. These models include use of a sepsis model, fetal tracheoesophageal fistula, constriction with umbilical tourniquet, or surgery with intestinal mesentery transection. The purpose of this study was to investigate a model using abdominal mesentery transection in neonatal pigs. Three groups of five pigs were used: sham, transection alone, and transection with bowel anastomosis. End points included death, anesthesia recovery time, weight at death, and postmortem findings. The anastomosis group recovered to the best recovery, and
