Features Key:

advanced real time game engine realistic simulation of teacher training interactive environment with dynamic obstacle road and high fidelity vehicle physics dynamic obstacle road dynamic realistic normal and pedestrian traffic obstacle road with realistic collision detection

Our game also features a unique game interface - a two dimensional head-up display featuring game map, detailed in-game object information, and accurate speedometer and odometer display.

Instructor Control

- allowing the instructor to see the entire environment from any angle and in any circumstance
- teacher can control all the vehicles via the control panel
- teacher can see the virtual camera in first-person view (allowing direct and remote control) and can change from camera view to third-person view at any time to see the drivers' position, vehicle status, and more
- if needed, the instructor can show the simulated owner's presence in any direction or out-of-camerasight direction
- if needed, the instructor can show the region of movement in any direction or out-of-camerasight direction
- teacher can see the true position of the vehicles in order to prevent collision

This feature creates a feeling of being a game developer and can be used in various game industries, helping to develop the forward-looking games such as simulation games.

Furthermore, the game is so pretty that you can build games where the instructors do not even know that they are in simulation.

The instructor control can be used to develop driving and motor sport simulations such as motocross racing as well as traffic simulations such as cross-town traffic.

What's new in Lost Dream:

Story Part 11 The Princess stood in front of Salan's altar, looking at the idols the witch had used against her. She held a still burning piece of wood in her right hand. The wood was a gift from the Witch, Arina. It was unusable, and the witch would not help her find something better. The Princess did not feel like apologizing to her, so she kept the piece of wood - the one that Arina's idols had injured her. The Princess could not see him, but she knew that she was crying. She recognized the demon's voice, even in the distance. "Princess...!" A child's voice, like a broken bell, sounded from the hallway. She walked to the door and looked into the room. At the end of the hallway, just outside the door, in the corner... the girl stood with her back to the wall, facing away from the Princess. There was a red mark on her face and dirt on her dress. It looked like she wasn't aware of her surroundings. That's because she wasn't. The girl was not in her body. She was a spirit, that's all. "Who are you?" "Maira, Faded Forest's Queen...!" She rushed towards the Princess, covering her eyes from sight. "Hold on...!" The voice of the Princess was startled. Not only the Princess, but also the priest and Priestess hid as the girl ran towards them. It was only when she got to the altar that she paused. And she didn't touch anything, so she came out of her trance. She made the princess look towards her and then looked back to the altar. The girl took a step forward, with her eyes still cast down. "Princess...?" "Princess Maira, what do you want from me?" Still with her eyes downcast, she asked. "Aren't you the witch Salan's lover?" "...That's right!" The girl in the corner nodded. "Do you know that witch is a wisewoman of Fadeless Forest
