WinMac.Q: .NET Debugger Hosting - Which debugger to use? I'm writing a.NET application and I want to host it on a server. It runs as a Windows service, and it has to be able to open some number of Visual Studio 2012 instances and attach to them, with execution pre-configured.

Once the service is running, it won't be doing anything but logging. Is it going to work with the default debugger, or does the server need to have debugging tools installed? If yes, how is debugging an ASP.NET application supposed to work? What arguments do I have to pass to the debugger with the ASP.NET debugger, and what arguments do I have to pass to the ASP.NET Service Host? What are the default arguments? Is it going to work if the application runs in its own app domain? A: Is it going to work with the default debugger, or does the server need to have debugging tools installed? Debugging in hosted environments is absolutely no different from any other scenario. You can use any Microsoft.NET debugger on the server side. If it's a Microsoft service, you need to have Visual Studio on the server side to be able to debug it. Otherwise, you can debug it using dotPeek, Reflector, ILSpy, dotTrace,

DbgEng etc etc... If yes, how is debugging an ASP.NET application supposed to work? You can attach to running instances of ASP.NET applications using any of the .NET debugging tools you just mentioned. The serverside debugger call for an ASP.NET application is not going to be different from any other run-time debugging call. What arguments do I have to pass to the
