Boom Box (sometimes called Boom Box 3000) is an electronic instrument that produces continuous pure tone, composed of a stack of panels on a rotating disc. The panels rotate, causing the tone to sweep across the frequency spectrum, producing a single note. In contrast to a string instrument, its output is continuous rather than changing in pitch, and unlike electronic keyboards, it offers an even distribution of sound in the octave. This makes the instrument more like a pipe organ than a keyboard, and therefore its name can be translated into a number of languages: boombox (Spanish), boomster (English),
