The walls are dotted with grimy photos and life-sized posters depicting the genius of some of the most famous surgeons of our time. These are the seats of honor where the visiting physicians will receive their instructions. The patient, an elderly African American woman, sits in a chair by the window, a younger version of a woman I met less than two weeks ago. Her malignant melanoma, a rare form of cancer, is advanced, but she has not responded well to prior treatments. The surgeon points to the table. "Put your arm back up there," he says to the patient, whom I have recently met for the first time. The patient lifts her arm, turns slightly in her seat to address the surgeon, "I was brought here by my daughter." "What are her symptoms?" "She thinks I have an ingrown toenail." "Well, put your foot back up there for a second." The patient slowly moves her foot. "It hurts," she says. The operating room falls silent. The doctor draws his scalpel across the cheek of his patient with infinite care. The skin, uncut, falls away. I glance at the patient; the doctor's expression is one of astonishment. "Now," he says. "You tell
