Pete Buttigieg, the mayor of South Bend, Indiana, raised $7 million in the first quarter for his campaign, and Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts raised $6 million, according to the campaign's second quarter fundraising reports filed late Wednesday. ADVERTISEMENT Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont was only about halfway to that, but with $5 million in the bank, his campaign may be able to avoid the fundraising struggle that former Vice President Joe Biden is facing. The numbers are a lot of money, but a fundraising report isn't everything. Democrats acknowledge that Sanders needs to win over voters like the donors, so he is showing his willingness to accept contributions as high as $2.8 million. For Buttigieg, the move shifts the senior lawmaker's fundraising apparatus away from being about taking

Gen. No. 9,082. Illinois Appellate Court. Opinion filed March 3, 1953. Released for publication March 24, 1953. *553 MYERS, DINAHY & DONOVAN, and HYATT & HYATT, all of Chicago, for appellants. GEORGE M. SCRUGGS, of Chicago, for appellees. MR. PRESIDING JUSTICE BURKE delivered the opinion of the court. The plaintiffs filed a complaint in equity against four of the defendants, both individually and as members of a partnership. The partnership is alleged to be a dealer of Ford automobiles. The complaint alleged that the four individual defendants and the partnership entered into an agreement that the plaintiffs would buy a new Plymouth automobile from the partnership and that the partnership would finance the purchase. Later they obtained a loan from the defendant, First National Bank of Chicago, on credit on which were outstanding payments to various endorsers of the loan, and which was secured by a chattel mortgage on the Plymouth automobile purchased from the partnership. The complaint alleged that the personal representative of the estate of one of the defendants breached and breached the contract, and that the defendants conspired with the representative to effect the fraud. The complaint prayed the cancellation of any claim of rights under the contract of purchase and for such other and further relief as equity should give. To the complaint the defendant, Ford Motor Company, in its answer sought to require the plaintiffs to set forth a specific breach of contract and asked for judgment for the amount of any loss that the plaintiffs may have sustained. In each answer the defendants, the partnership and the individual defendants, denied the making of the contract. *554 The partnership was defaulted for failure to answer the complaint. After a hearing on motions by the plaintiffs, the trial court

the ingress of environmental contaminants. Example environmental Contaminants may include moisture and/or particulates. Thus, it is known to include a seal within the package to prevent the ingress of environmental contaminants. For example, a plastic body of a lead-free or low-leaded solder composition (e.g., composed of tin, silver and copper or tin, silver and lead) may be sealed around a circuit side of a die or chip to protect against moisture and chemicals from interfering with the operation of the chip or from contaminating the chip. The plastic tends to be connected to the package substrate. Commonly, barrier films may be included in the package to protect the chip/die from moisture and other environmental hazards. Due to the low-k dielectric properties of low-k packaging material, ultrathin barrier films are often used to sufficiently protect the chip from moisture. The barrier films are typically formed on the surface of the package, and may be included in a multi-layer package or a chip. However, conventional barrier films are often associated with trade-offs. For example, the availability of a barrier film is generally limited to the addition of an extra (e.g., about 6-10 nm) thickness to the barrier layer. Thus, such barrier films generally provide limited protection to devices (e.g., chips). Further, the available barrier materials are limited to those with the properties of the barrier layer described above. Accordingly, conventional barrier films are often limited in application to protecting electronic components.
