Although a pediatric practice may be expected to have a smaller influenza burden, the practice-based rate of influenza is thought to represent the overall burden. We conducted a prospective, observational, surveillance study to determine the incidence and distribution of influenza among a family-based pediatric practice in Rochester, New York. Specimens were collected for influenza testing on 2 standard clinic dates, and were submitted by physician-ordered nasal swabs. Influenza virus was detected by immunofluorescence in 50 of 2,557 specimens (2.1%) submitted and confirmed by reverse-transcriptase polymerase chain reaction in 31 (1.9%) specimens. Thirty-three (2.2%) specimens yielded a respiratory virus other than influenza: 10 of 981 (1.0%) specimens yielded adenovirus, seven of 404 (1.8%) yielded respiratory syncytial virus, and 16 of 241 (6.6%) yielded parainfluenza virus. The ratio of influenza incidence by month was within 2-fold of the overall population ratio of 0.5 to 0.9 cases per 100 persons in the study population. Extrapolating the overall incidence of influenza would lead to a total yearly burden of influenza of fewer than 250,000, which is an underestimate. Most infants

Exciting things are happening all around you in Thailand. Are you ready? I really like the feeling you get when you see events going on that you may not have been aware of. While I don't have many concrete plans for this trip, I have a feeling that I might be popping up from unexpected places. I've been busy these last couple of days and haven't had much time to sit down and muse. Today I came across a fantastic article, Arrange-a-Garden-Fruit-Trees-fast-with-the-Cheap-Seedlings-for-Orchards, which had some good thoughts to share and some fun facts about Thailand. It blew my mind. I wanted to share it with all of you. This is a guest post written by: Ada Isadore
