Because it helps me to pull the files from my storage to my hard disk. However, it's not bad to wait for it to complete. There is another solution but you have to create another computer to do it. For only US Dollar 50 per computer, they will send you their spyware free scanner and you can scan your computer. This is very cool stuff, thanks. For a number of years, I've been in an uphill battle to fight a scourge in the world that was costing me hundreds of dollars a year. I'm glad you finally have a solution to the problem.

Q: How to get the current route and file name in custom module? I have a custom module, a view, a controller, and associated resources. The view is a "page". How do I get the route name, and file name to create the page? `$this->template = 'frontend/layout/page/view.phtml'`; A: If you have access to a Symfony object, you can do this: `$this->getRequest()->getRequestUri()`; to get the route name, and `$this->getRequest()->get("filename")`; to get the file name. If you don't, you can construct the route to know the name and filename: `$route = $this->getRequest()->get("_route")`; Then you can get those two as in the Symfony examples: `$request->get("_route")`; `$request->get("filename")`; A: There is also an alternative approach for routes, using the AsseticBundle. Create a view.html.twig template and add a `{{ extension_name() }}` tag to the top of the file, where `extension_name()` is from `assetic.helper`. Then, if you have access to the AsseticBundle object (via the assetic service) use: `$assetic = $this->getAssetic()`; `$assetic['bundles']->extend(['AcmeDev\DemoBundle\Entity\DataTypes\Product'], 'AcmeDev\DemoBundle\Entity\DataTypes\Product')`; Which enables you to use the `{{ extension_name() }}` tag to get the route or filename (depending on your route config).
