Primary clear cell carcinoma of the bladder: cytomorphologic, immunohistochemical, and ultrastructural features. Primary clear cell carcinomas (PCCs) of the bladder are extremely rare, with only 22 reported cases to date. In the current study, we present cytomorphologic, immunohistochemical, and ultrastructural features of a case of PCC of the bladder that occurred in a 77-year-old man. The tumor was composed of moderately cellular sheets of cells with abundant clear cytoplasm that stained positive for cytokeratin and vimentin, and negative for epithelial membrane antigen (EMA) and carcinoembryonic antigen (CEA). The cytoplasmic material was seen to be periodic acid-Schiff-positive (PAS-positive) and diastase-resistant. Ultrastructural features of the tumor cells included intracellular tonofilaments, desmosomes, and infrequent microvilli. Similarities of the present tumor to other clear cell tumors of the bladder will be discussed. MetalCaps have recently introduced a new type of self-sealing cap for aerosols, that do not leak when not screwed onto the outlet; they are instead designed to withstand the extreme internal pressures of a non-leaking aerosol, and not to burst or leak when tipped. This new type of self-sealing cap includes a metal component to accommodate the air flow or negative pressure created when the aerosol is activated. When the cap is 6d1f23a050
