important license note. you may download and evaluate any version on this page, however, if you currently own any previous version of global mapper, and plan to upgrade to 24.0, a new license is required. the licenses for the most recent releases are available to users who have active maintenance and support. users with out of date m&s will have to renew m&s to access the software. please contact authorizebluemapblegeo.com with any questions or concerns. global mapper allows you to compose and dynamically build multiple mappers against the same data store. the configuration api allows you to configure multiple objectmappers for single, multiple, or an arbitrary number of data stores. to support common information model (cim) data model conventions, global mapper supports the globalmapperplugin, which is a set of extensions to spring integration. the globalmapperplugin provides setters for commonly used properties on the datamapper, such as applicationid and appid. when spring boot detects that a component is on the classpath and is a framework-compatible version of a framework-independent dependency, it automatically adds a dependency to the application classpath so that the dependent component can be resolved as a bean using your regular bean-scanning mechanism. but you can configure this to happen in special cases (with particular version ranges or when the bean is annotated with particular annotation) or in general. the last option in the current spring.devtools.restart.additional-paths configuration is a comma-separated list of paths containing class files to monitor for changes with the spring.additional-paths-changed-on-restart property. for example, you can specify a myjavacode directory to monitor, along with any path containing class files in myjavacode. 5ec8ef588b
