this strategy in which women don't just protest on the streets, but go directly to the problem was previously unheard of. these women acted as the keepers of the traditions of their society, particularly the ritual cleaning of the home, which women are historically responsible for. women were behind the uprising from the get-go, and maintained that role throughout. if one man had'shut up' and stayed in his home, the street would've been empty. if one woman had ignored the men's demands, many of the men would've left, possibly destroying the entire movement. parikh, sherry and other faculty members were each issued an average of six to 10 cases of water for every two of soda, diet and regular, or one case of water for every five of soda, diet and regular, which they said is considerably higher than the usual community standard of one case of water per person per day. (university officials, for their part, refused to confirm or deny the complaints and said they are investigating.) the university of california, davis, faculty voted overwhelmingly tuesday to issue a boycott of the meat produced by the for-profit agriculture corporation, holding the company responsible and the meat off the menu at more than 10 u.c. campuses. (the company, moreover, owns a patent for a genetically engineered seaweed, saccharina latissima, that stores carbon dioxide in its tough cell walls, which are then harvested and used to make ethanol.) "this is not about political correctness," said aaron rentschler, a professor of sociology at u.c. davis. "this is about standing up to powerful big agribusiness. this is about standing up to a company that is constantly trying to patent wild aquatic plants that give you zero return."

the intergovernmental panel on climate change (ipcc) (2019) 411 initiated the ipcc special report on the ocean and cryosphere in a changing climate (sroc) (intergovernmental panel on climate change, 2019) 412 to: “assess impacts of the combined effects of climate change and of human activities on the ocean and cryosphere, identify their scientific and socio-economic potential, and project the implications for natural resources, food security, ecosystems, human well-being and survival.” the report provides projections and identification of key uncertainties for a range of regions and sectors. it provides a preliminary quantification of regional and global ocean changes, using a combination of processes and analyses. in summary, sea level rise poses greater risks to human health than sea level rise does, which in turn poses greater risks to human health than sea level rise plus glacier melt, which in turn poses greater risks than sea level rise plus glacier melt plus ocean warming. projected changes in river basins globally are likely to have important effects on human health and other societal functions in the 21st century. these effects are likely to be substantial for most basins in northern and western temperate regions, but, depending on the basin, may vary in relative importance. for most basins in the tropics, changes are likely to be less important than for temperate basins. overall, the analysis concludes that climate change is likely to have significant consequences for human health globally. 5ec8ef588b
