This classroom resource provides the learner the opportunity to develop team communication skills. In class, we teach and model critical thinking and communication skills, which may be enhanced by the use of mannequins and the principles of Team Decision-Making (TDM). Teamwork is at the core of patient safety, and the simulation can be used to practice a variety of team roles, including management of error, debriefing, team-building, and summary. Those roles are further explained in the simulation scenarios, enabling learners to develop proficiency in and the ability to demonstrate several of the elements of team-building, including integrity, dependability, trust, accountability, respect, creativity, and responsibility. Through team training and modeling of Team Decision-Making, students can practice the principles of effective team decision-making, teamwork, and quality improvement. This classroom learning also allows learners to develop and use critical thinking skills, and apply management skills, including recognizing mistakes and taking appropriate action.
