Of course you know it is blue and white, but how about the medals, epaulets, a lot of them? Download and look into it, or, even better, download the whole set of 234 images with the police medals, in case you never had a chance to see them that closely. A friend of mine from Hong Kong told me his knowledge about the police uniforms. He is a policeman and from the picture he told me that he likes the uniform, in which the medals are included. Of course he said that he wears the uniform, when he is on duty. And it is not only about what he likes, but how his friend said about the uniform: "Wow, you know, the old police uniforms are so classic. They are always in blue and white. So they wear them after the older ones get worn out. What I really don't like in them is the white belts with blue stripes. They stick out from the waistline and look rather weird. It's not that bad, however. It's just a matter of. All male and female officers wear an identical set of rank badges to identify their roles: the head of a Roman couple in a circle, or, more commonly, in an oval; the others a circle, or a circle and a cross, with the companion markings, and the rank. Hat decorations are the only badges of 79a2804d6b
