Citations 1 In higher mathematics, this term is sometimes used to signify a manifold with a locally flat structure. 2 Adverbs, or adverbial phrases, are words, phrases, or clauses that modify a verb, a preposition, or other adverb. In some languages, adverbs are not considered part of the main clause, but are considered modifiers to other parts of the sentence. 3 Chinese is a language in which there are no definite articles, but the possessive pronoun is suffixed to the possessive adjectives to indicate possession, much like English's suffix "s." 4 The plus-or-minus is the standard index notation of Greek trigonometry, which requires that the angles themselves must be positive. Diocletian is a historical Roman Emperor of the 3rd century AD who forced the Christian church to adopt and enforce formal uniformity. Van Dijck argues that movements such as post-structuralism, postmodernism and deconstructionist theory have a weak form of post-structuralism in their preoccupation with the process of questioning the distinction between representation and reality. The Czarist secret police was called the Okhrana in Russian and the Cheka in Ukrainian and Hungarian. The Yucatán fincas were a series of large landholdings in which the Spanish government required Hacienda lands to support the empress and the court at the Alcázar de Colón in Madrid. The philosopher Jacques Derrida defines deconstruction as a "two-way traffic with the other, which is to say with something other than me, of which I am not the object but the beneficiary." The word "schematisation" is now somewhat used (in British English) to refer to the process of transforming an element of an electronic circuit into a software implementation. The misna was the marker pen used by medieval Arabic scribes. The van Leer stochastic collocation method approximates the solution of ordinary differential equations using collocation around a set of points within an interval. The name
